

Evolution Moving Company Expands Long Distance Routes Connecting San Antonio to Austin, Dallas, and Fort Worth

The San Antonio mover adds dedicated intrastate routes to three major Texas metros, with in-house W-2 crews handling every leg instead of third parties.

SAN ANTONIO, TX, UNITED STATES,
September 15, 2026 /
EINPresswire.com/ -- Evolution Moving Company has expanded its long-distance route network out of San Antonio, adding dedicated intrastate service lanes connecting the Alamo City to Austin, Dallas, and Fort Worth. The expansion responds to sustained relocation traffic along the I-35 and I-10 corridors, where households and businesses increasingly move between Texas metros rather than out of state.

The company now operates scheduled long-distance capacity on each of the three routes, handled entirely by its own crews and equipment. That structure separates Evolution from the brokered model that dominates much of the intrastate moving market, in which a customer books with one company and the move is resold to an unrelated contractor who arrives on moving day.

"Texas-to-Texas moves are their own category," said Ryan Hughey of Evolution Moving Company. "A family relocating from San Antonio to Fort Worth is not doing a cross-country move, but they are also not doing a two-hour local job. Those moves were falling into a gap where they got handed off to whoever had a truck. We built the routes so they do not have to be."

Why the corridor matters

San Antonio sits at the southern end of one of the most heavily traveled relocation corridors in the country. Job transfers, corporate campus relocations, university moves, and military reassignments all push volume north toward Austin and the Dallas-Fort Worth metroplex. Evolution reports that intrastate requests have grown steadily as a share of its book of business, prompting the decision to formalize the routes rather than quote them case by case.

Each route now runs with standardized pricing structure, defined transit windows, and the same crew standards applied to the company's local work. Customers receive a single point of contact from the estimate through delivery, and the crew loading the truck in San Antonio is the crew unloading it at the destination.

Same crew standard on every leg

Every Evolution mover is a W-2 employee rather than a day laborer or subcontractor. Crew members complete a two-week in-house training program covering furniture protection, load architecture, stair and tight-access work, and customer communication, and each passes federal and state background checks and drug screening before a first paid move.

That standard carries directly into the expanded routes. The company applies the same protocols to a 270-mile move to Dallas that it applies to a crosstown job, including full furniture wrapping, floor protection, and itemized inventory at both ends.

Evolution is fully licensed and insured, operating under USDOT 2467590 and TX DMV 006779351C, with liability, workers' compensation, and cargo coverage in place.

Built on a decade of local work

Evolution has served the San Antonio market since 2014 and holds a 4.7-star independent rating with roughly 97 percent positive reviews, a 96 percent referral rate, and a 1 percent damage claim rate. The company handles a significant volume of PCS and military relocations from Joint Base San Antonio, Lackland Air Force Base, Randolph Air Force Base, and Fort Sam Houston, and offers military discounts on request.

Because Evolution already operates teams in the Austin, Dallas, and Fort Worth markets, the new routes connect existing infrastructure on both ends rather than relying on partner agents at the destination. Customers moving to any of the three metros are served by Evolution personnel from origin to delivery.

Residential, commercial, packing, storage, piano, and labor-only services remain available alongside the expanded route network.
