

Eriza's Language School Selected for Second Year of Filipino Language Training for U.S. Embassy Manila Staff

Philippine based language school continues Filipino instruction program for U.S. Embassy personnel following its first year of classes.

MANILA, PHILIPPINES, September 15, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Eriza's Language School has begun its second year of Filipino language classes for staff members of the U.S. Embassy in Manila, continuing its role as a provider of professional Filipino language training for Embassy personnel.

The new series of classes follows the school's delivery of Filipino language instruction to U.S. Embassy staff during the previous year. The continuation of the program marks another milestone for Eriza's Language School as it expands its work with embassies, international organizations, companies, and foreign professionals seeking practical Filipino language skills and cultural understanding.

"For professionals living and working in the Philippines, learning Filipino can make everyday communication easier and also create a much stronger connection with the people and culture around them," said Eriza Cuizon, founder of Eriza's Language School. "We're very happy to be beginning a second year of classes with U.S. Embassy staff and to continue supporting learners who want to communicate more confidently in Filipino."

Practical Filipino Language Training for International Professionals

The Filipino classes are designed to help participants develop practical communication skills they can use in both professional and everyday settings.

Eriza's Language School combines conversational practice with structured instruction in grammar, vocabulary, pronunciation, and sentence formation. Lessons can also be adapted to participants' existing language ability and communication needs.

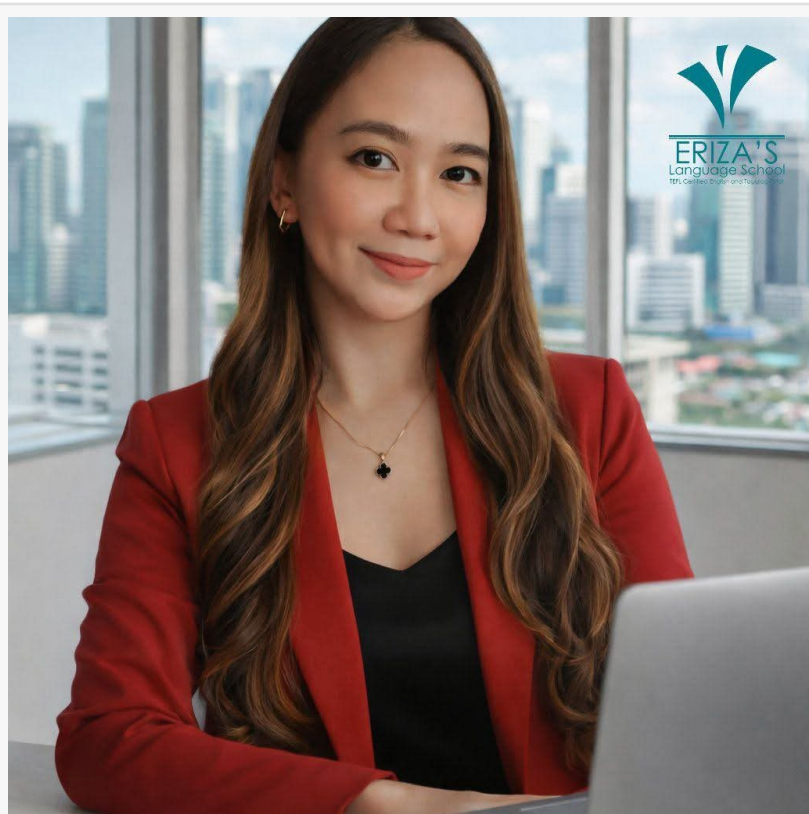

For foreign professionals based in the Philippines, Filipino language training can be especially useful for navigating everyday interactions, understanding commonly used expressions, and communicating more naturally with Filipino colleagues and members of the local community.

While Filipino and English are both official languages of the Philippines, Filipino remains widely used in daily conversation throughout Metro Manila and across the country.

Growing Demand for Filipino Language Training

Eriza's Language School has provided Filipino and English instruction to students from more than 60 countries, including professionals, expatriates, diplomats, corporate employees, and individuals preparing to live or work in the Philippines.

The school offers private lessons as well as customized Filipino language training for embassies and expat employees, with programs that can be delivered online, in person, or through a combination of both formats depending on the needs of the group.

Institutional programs can be customized around participant proficiency levels, schedules, professional environments, and specific communication goals.

The continuation of the U.S. Embassy Manila classes reflects a broader area of focus for the school: helping international professionals develop the Filipino language skills needed to participate more confidently in life and work in the Philippines.

“Language learning goes beyond memorizing vocabulary,” Cuizon said. “Our goal is to help students actually use Filipino in real conversations and gradually become more comfortable communicating on their own.”
