BRANFORD, CT, UNITED STATES, September 17, 2026 / EINPresswire.com/ -- Adams Moving, a family-owned moving company founded in Branford in 2021, today marked its fifth year in business. What started as a single truck and a local reputation built on word of mouth has grown into a company now serving nine Connecticut communities: Branford, New Haven, Stamford, Bridgeport, Norwalk, Guilford, Madison, Clinton, and Middletown.

Over the past five years, Adams Moving has built its client base entirely through referrals and repeat customers, growing to more than 290 five-star reviews from families and businesses across Connecticut.

"Five years ago, this was one truck and me answering the phone," said Adam, owner of Adams Moving. "What hasn't changed is how we treat every job. We still show up ourselves, we still quote what we charge, and we still pick up the phone when someone calls. That's what got us from Branford to nine towns, not a marketing budget, just word of mouth from people who had a good experience."

Five Years of Growth

Adams Moving's expansion has followed a consistent pattern: starting with local moves in and around Branford, then growing into neighboring shoreline towns as demand followed the company's reputation. The company now offers a full range of services across its service area, including local and long-distance moving, residential and commercial relocation, packing services, junk removal, apartment moving, and white-glove handling for high-value and specialty items.

The company has also built its business without subcontractors or third-party crews. Every move, regardless of size, is handled by Adams Moving's own trained employees using the company's own trucks, a model Adam says has been central to maintaining consistency as the company has grown.

"When you subcontract jobs out, you lose control over who's actually showing up and how they handle people's belongings," Adam said. "We built this company so that never happens. The crew that answers the phone is accountable for the crew that shows up."

Serving the Connecticut Shoreline and Beyond

Adams Moving's nine-town service area now stretches from Fairfield County's urban centers through the New Haven County shoreline and into Middlesex County, covering a wide range of property types and moving needs along the way. The company handles everything from apartment moves near Yale in New Haven to seasonal and vacation property moves along the Clinton shoreline, to high-value residential relocations in Madison and Guilford's more affluent markets.

That range, Adam says, is part of what makes the five-year milestone meaningful. "We're not just doing one type of move in one type of town. One day it's a college student moving into a walk-up in New Haven, the next it's a family closing up a beach cottage in Clinton for the winter. Being able to handle all of that with the same crew, the same trucks, and the same attention to detail is something we're proud of."

Over the past five years, the company has also expanded its service offerings beyond standard moving, adding junk removal, white-glove handling for antiques and high-value items, and dedicated commercial moving services to meet demand from both residential customers and local businesses across its service area.

What's Next

Looking ahead, Adams Moving says it plans to continue growing within its existing nine-town service area rather than expanding rapidly into new markets, prioritizing depth over breadth as it enters its next five years. That means continuing to build out specialty services like white-glove and estate-level moving for the shoreline's second-home market, while keeping the same owner-involved, in-house crew model that Adam credits for the company's growth so far.

"Growth for the sake of growth isn't the goal," Adam said. "The goal is that five years from now, someone in Branford or Middletown or anywhere in between can still call this number and get me or someone I trained personally, not a call center. That's not going to change as we get bigger."
