

Curve Blue Releases New Album by Deuter: WHAT THE ELEPHANT TOLD Presents Gentle Ambient New Age Music

The pioneering ambient artist draws inspiration from elephants at Kenya's Sheldrick Wildlife Trust, transforming their names and spirit into musical meditation.

LOS ANGELES, CA, UNITED STATES, September 18, 2026 /

EINPresswire.com/ -- Deuter – the iconic artist known for creating music that encourages peacefulness and deep listening – reveals a new passion in his latest album, What the Elephant Told. While the music continues his tradition of blending ambient, world, and new age music, the evocative cover art and album title reveal Deuter's long term admiration for elephants. The album drops today on Curve Blue, distributed by A Train Entertainment.

Deuter's new album is inspired by his love of elephants.

What the Elephant Told invites the listener to contemplate the natural, metaphysical and ephemeral worlds around them through a new lens: the wisdom of the elephant. The album's track titles are names of elephants living at the Sheldrick Wildlife Trust (SWT), one of Africa's oldest wildlife charities and a leading conservation organization. SWT's pioneering Orphans' Project, the world's first and most successful program of its kind to rescue, rehabilitate, and reintegrate orphaned African elephants, rhinos, and other creatures into the wild, has earned international acclaim. The organization's broader conservation mission encompasses extensive aerial, field, and community support initiatives that protect wildlife and preserve vital habitats across Kenya.

What the Elephant Told is an enlightening instrumental album. The music amplifies human and animal connections in ambient soundbaths of cello, synth, violin, oboe, flute, and piano arranged for mellow enjoyment in Deuter's wholly unique way. For Deuter, the space between the notes is as vital as the music itself. Often, the songs slowly fade away, guiding the listener into a peaceful stillness, not unlike watching mysterious elephants disappear into the mist.

Ultimately, What the Elephant Told treats sound like a painter treats color—using nature, wind, and instruments to create a harmonious sanctuary for the soul. Our world is moving faster than ever today; perhaps we could learn a lot from the strong and steady way of the elephants. Deuter provides the soundtrack to slow down, gather one's chosen family, and simply "be."
