NEW YORK, NY, UNITED STATES, September 19, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Hunt Slonem's unmistakable universe of rabbits, butterflies, birds and brilliant color arrived at One Art Space in Tribeca for "Through the Looking Glass," an exhibition running through Monday, September 28th, 2026 which brings together works that capture the repetition, movement and fascination with nature that have become signatures of the celebrated American neo-expressionist artist.

Among the works on show which were curated by Co-Owner of One Art Space, MaryAnn Giella McCulloh are "Pink Ascension" (2021), a monumental 77-by-101-inch oil on canvas in which butterflies drift across a luminous pink field, transforming one of Slonem's most enduring subjects into an enveloping study of rhythm, repetition and movement. At the other end of the scale is "Blue Hutch" (2025), a 20-by-24-inch oil on wood depicting a gathering of Slonem's instantly recognizable rabbits against a vivid blue ground.

Artist, Hunt Slonem said of new exhibition Through the Looking Glass, "A dream of what I see through the looking glass, where my creatures go, where we cannot see them, following their wonder — wonderland and inspiration, the source of all my creativity. A joyous venture". Curator MaryAnn Giella McCulloh commented, "The evening also marked strong opening night sales, highlighting the remarkable excitement surrounding Hunt Slonem's presence in Tribeca, New York"
