

CelluHeal Brings More Wound Dressing Choices to Everyday First Aid

CelluHeal offers collagen, alginate, hydrofiber, foam and protective dressings for everyday first aid, alongside Kollavet veterinary wound care.

MARTINSBURG , WV, UNITED STATES, September 26, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Cuts, scrapes and minor burns don't all need the same kind of dressing. CelluHeal™, the over-the-counter wound care line from Human BioSciences, Inc., brings a full set of dressing types together in one range, so people can match the dressing to the wound.

Some wounds need more absorbency. Others need protection, moisture control or collagen support. The CelluHeal range covers each of those needs.

At the center of the range are two collagen products. Cellusheet™ Collagen Sheets and Cellufil™ Collagen Particles are made with non-hydrolyzed Type I bovine collagen and are intended for the management of minor cuts, scrapes, abrasions, lacerations and minor burns.

Alongside them, the range includes calcium alginate, hydrofiber, silicone foam, silicone composite, bordered gauze and protective film dressings.

Each type does a different job. Calcium alginate and hydrofiber dressings absorb wound fluid and form a soft gel, foam dressings add cushioning and coverage, and protective film and bordered gauze dressings cover and protect the wound.

That gives shoppers a real choice instead of reaching for the same bandage every time.

Alongside its human wound care products, CelluHeal also offers Kollavet™, a veterinary wound care range featuring collagen particles and sheets for animals.

CelluHeal products are sold through the company's online store at celluheal.com.

The site also offers product information and wound care guidance to help customers work out which dressing may suit their needs.
