Lufthansa Proposed Class Action For Alleged Checked Baggage Fee Overcharges for USA and Canada Travel to/from Europe

Proposed USA and Canadian class action against German airlines Lufthansa for alleged checked baggage fee overcharges.

VANCOUVER, BRITISH COLUMBIA, CANADA, September 28, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Evolink Law Group has filed a proposed class proceeding in the Federal Court against Deutsche Lufthansa Aktiengesellschaft (Lufthansa), alleging that the German airline systematically charged travellers checked baggage fees for USA and Canadian travel to and from Europe exceeding the prices stipulated in Lufthansa's own published tariff.

The Statement of Claim asserts that Lufthansa breached both its contract of carriage and section 54 of Canada's Competition Act by charging a higher price than the one clearly displayed to consumers at the time of booking or payment. The plaintiff seeks damages for the price difference, investigation costs, legal fees on a full-indemnity basis, punitive damages, and an injunction preventing further breaches.

According to the filing, Lufthansa's tariff states that the first checked bag is charged at CAD $70 for travel between Canada and Europe. However, the plaintiff reports being charged CAD $75 on his outbound flight and approximately HUF 16,400 (about CAD $76) on his return leg. The airline's own baggage fee calculator reportedly shows CAD $75, contradicting the tariff's stated rate of CAD $70.

The proposed class includes all individuals who, on or after January 10, 2020, travelled on an itinerary marketed by Lufthansa for travel from/to Canada or the United States to/from Europe and paid checked baggage fees exceeding the tariff rate. The plaintiff estimates the class comprises tens of thousands of passengers with similar experiences.
