Venture Medical Acquires Medipyxis, a Purpose-Built EMR and Operating System for Wound Care Practices

Venture Medical, LLC, an advanced wound care solutions company, today announced that it has acquired Medipyxis, Inc.

MISSOULA, MT, UNITED STATES, September 29, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Venture Medical, LLC, an advanced wound care solutions company, today announced that it has acquired Medipyxis, Inc., developer of a purpose-built electronic medical record and operating system for wound care practices. Medipyxis will operate as a wholly owned subsidiary of Venture Medical and will continue as a separate platform under the leadership of founder Damon Ebanks, who will serve as President of Medipyxis. Financial terms were not disclosed.

Wound care practices are working through a significant restructuring of Medicare wound care reimbursement. At the same time, documentation requirements and claims scrutiny have intensified, including the WISeR prior authorization model now operating in six states. The patient need has not changed. What has changed is how efficiently a practice must operate to be successful.

Medipyxis was designed specifically to support wound care practices, and provides an end-to-end solution from patient intake to billable claim. The platform tightly integrates AI-assisted referral intake, structured wound documentation tools aligned to Medicare coverage requirements, real-time eligibility verification, scheduling and route planning, credentialing alerts, product inventory tracking, and billing into a single system, replacing the collection of disconnected – and often manual - tools many practices rely on today.

“The reduced payment changes did not reduce the number of patients who need wound care. The need continues to grow. What the changes have done is reduced the margin for inefficiency,” said John Schroeder, Chief Executive Officer of Venture Medical. “It is critical that wound care practices grow and thrive so that they can take care of the patients who need it most. The practices that succeed will be the ones that spend less time on faxes, phone calls, and paperwork and more time at the bedside. Medipyxis was built by a talented team who understand how wound care practices actually work and how AI and other advanced technologies can help them. We intend to give Medipyxis the resources to bring its platform to more practices and patients.”

In the near term, Medipyxis will remain an independent platform focused on the needs of wound care clinicians. “We built Medipyxis to help wound care teams spend less time stitching together disconnected systems and more time focused on patients,” said Damon Ebanks. Founder and President of Medipyxis. “Joining Venture Medical gives us the resources, clinical expertise, and reach to accelerate the platform without losing the focus that made it valuable in the first place. Our customers will continue working with the same team and the same purpose-built platform—now with greater capacity to innovate and support their growth.”
