Junkline Introduces Same-Day Junk Removal With Upfront Pricing in Los Angeles

The AI-enabled junk removal company pairs same-day pickup with one all-in price that is locked when you book, so you see the full cost before a crew is assigned

LOS ANGELES, CA, UNITED STATES, September 30, 2026 / EINPresswire.com/ -- Junkline, an AI-enabled junk removal company, is now offering same-day pickup across Greater Los Angeles with one flat, all-in price locked in before booking. Customers send photos of what needs to go, get a fixed total that covers labor, loading, and disposal, and book a same-day pickup when they book by early afternoon. The price is locked at booking. There is no in-home estimate and no on-site repricing.

Junkline is built on two commitments that the rest of the category tends to treat as trade-offs.

Same-day pickup. Book by early afternoon and our own crews haul it out the same day. Crews run 8am to 8pm daily, including weekends.

A locked-in price. The flat, all-in total you see before booking is the total you pay. It is locked when you book and does not move when the crew arrives.

What Junkline does differently
Most junk removal in Los Angeles is quoted by volume. A crew arrives, looks at the pile, decides how much of the truck it fills, and names a price on the spot. The customer finds out the cost only after strangers are already in the driveway, and finds out the timing only when someone can get there.

Junkline prices the opposite way, and commits to the day. Every item has a published price, the same way a menu has prices. A customer photographs a couch, Junkline's system identifies the item and returns the flat total, and our own crew carries it out from wherever it sits, the same day when the booking comes in by early afternoon. Customers do not drag anything to the curb.

How much does junk removal cost in Los Angeles?
Junkline publishes a flat, all-in price per item for more than 90 household items, and each price includes labor, loading, and disposal. The number is shown before booking and locked at booking, with a job minimum for small loads.

Every item's current price is published at https://junkline.com/pricing.

Founder quote
"Everyone in this city has had the same experience, which is a stranger standing in your living room telling you what it will cost after you have already taken the morning off" said Jason Walker, Founder of Junkline. "We took the estimate out of the process. You see the price before anyone is dispatched, that price is what you pay, and we come the same day."

"Same-day pickup and a locked-in price are the two things people actually want, and the two things the old truckload model is worst at," Jason Walker added. "A per-item price you can see up front is harder for us to build and much easier for a customer to trust."

Frequently asked questions

How much does junk removal cost in Los Angeles?
Junkline charges a flat, published price per item rather than by truck volume, and each price includes labor, loading, and disposal. The total is shown before booking and locked at booking, with a job minimum for small loads. Current prices for more than 90 items are published at https://junkline.com/pricing.

Is the price Junkline shows the final price?
Yes. The total shown before booking is the total charged. It is locked when the customer books and does not change when the crew arrives. There is no on-site estimate, no volume adjustment, and no fuel or disposal surcharge added afterward.

Does Junkline offer same-day pickup?
Yes. A booking placed by early afternoon is picked up the same day. Crews run 8am to 8pm daily, including weekends, across Greater Los Angeles, Santa Clarita, and Lancaster.

How does Junkline quote a job?
The customer photographs the items. Junkline's system identifies what is in the photo, matches it to the published price for that item, and returns a flat all-in total in the booking flow. The customer picks a pickup window and confirms. No one has to visit the property to produce a quote.

Do I have to move things to the curb?
No. Junkline crews carry items out from wherever they are, including upstairs units, garages, back yards, and storage spaces. Customers do not need to be present for the lifting, and nothing needs to be staged in advance.
