HIGHLIGHTS INCLUDE:

Leading the sale is Daniel Craig's Tom Ford suit from Skyfall (2012), estimated to fetch between $27,000 - $53,000 at auction. Craig wore the grey suit during the film's opening pursuit through Istanbul, as Bond chased Patrice across rooftops and onto a moving train. Custom-made for the production, the two-piece suit is accompanied by a Tom Ford shirt, tie and cufflinks.

Also estimated at $27,000 - $53,000 is Paloma's dress and sandals from No Time to Die (2021), associated with Ana de Armas's appearance as the CIA agent during Bond's mission in Cuba.

The literary highlights include a complete set of 14 Jonathan Cape first edition, first impression Ian Fleming Bond books, estimated at $27,000 - $53,000. Beginning with Casino Royale (1953), the set brings together all 12 novels and two short story collections. Each volume has been rebound in leather with a design based on its original cover artwork and is housed in a matching slipcase.

A British quad poster for Dr. No (1962), estimated at $11,000 - $22,000, takes the collection back to the first Bond film. Featuring Mitchell Hooks' artwork of Sean Connery against a yellow background, it was the first poster produced for the franchise. The sale also includes an SFX model unit clapperboard from Octopussy (1983), estimated at $6,000 - $11,000, used during filming of miniature-effects sequences.

The online-only auction is now open for bidding, with the full catalogue available at propstore.com/bond. Bidding is available to collectors worldwide and closes on October 27, 2026.
