

BluePeake Launches Waterfront Exterior Painting and Repair Program for Annapolis-Area Homes

The "Waterfront Beauty, Protected" campaign brings painting, wood repair and power washing together for homes exposed to salt, wind and moisture

ANNAPOLIS, MD, UNITED STATES, October 15, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- A house on the water gets different weather than a house a mile inland. Wind comes off the water, salt settles on siding and trim, and moisture lingers on surfaces that never fully dry. Paint that lasts for years inland can start failing early, and the damage often begins where the homeowner can't see it.

Waterfront owners don't need a speech about how much they love their house,”

"Waterfront owners don't need a speech about how much they love their house," said Stephen Reilly of BluePeake. "They need someone who checks the corner of the deck where water always collects, or the trim under the eaves that never sees the sun, and tells them the truth about what needs fixing before we paint. That honesty is what makes the finish last."

What Water, Salt and Wind Do to a Home's Exterior

Most people notice peeling paint. Fewer notice what comes before it. On waterfront homes, problems tend to start in five places:

- Under the paint. Moisture trapped behind the coating lifts it from the surface and softens the wood beneath.
- On siding and trim. Salt and mildew break down the finish, and they are easy to paint over when they should be cleaned off.
- At joints and edges. Cracked caulk around windows, doors and corner boards lets water into the wall.
- On decks and railings. Constant sun, spray and foot traffic wear these down faster than the rest of the house.
- Along the roofline. When gutters overflow or drain poorly, water runs down the fascia and soffits and soaks into the wood. Over time that leads to peeling paint, staining and rot that a fresh coat can't fix on its own.

On the water, a good exterior paint job is mostly preparation and repair. The paint is the final step.

carpentry team repairs it before painting begins, so new paint isn't covering a hidden problem. Surfaces are then cleaned. Power washing removes dirt, mildew and loose material so the paint can bond properly. Loose paint is scraped, rough areas are sanded and gaps are caulked. Only after that does the first coat go on.

Every client receives a written proposal that sets out costs, materials and timeline before work starts, with no surprise fees along the way.

Serving Annapolis and the Surrounding Shoreline

BluePeake works throughout Annapolis and nearby communities, many of them on or near the water, including Arnold, Severna Park, Riva, Edgewater, Mayo, Shady Side, Deale, Stevensville, Grasonville and Queenstown. The full list is on the areas we serve page.

Waterfront homes often need more than one service, and the same team can handle it. Interior painting is available with a color consultant, which helps in rooms where light off the water changes how a color looks through the day. Cabinet refinishing, kitchen renovations and bathroom renovations are also offered. Commercial painting is available for property managers, HOAs, realtors, retail businesses, offices, hotels and churches.

Is power washing included? Power washing is available as part of the project and is used to clean surfaces before painting. Your written proposal shows exactly what is included.

How much does exterior painting cost in Maryland? The price depends on the size of the house, the condition of the surfaces, how much repair is needed and the materials chosen. BluePeake publishes a pricing guide for a general idea, and every estimate comes as a written proposal.

What is in the written proposal? The proposal lists the costs, the materials and the timeline, so you know what to expect before work begins.

Is the estimate free? Yes. You can request a free estimate through the website or by phone.
