At Ampcus, our commitment remains clear: deliver meaningful value for our clients, create opportunities for our employees and help strengthen the communities we serve.”

Salil Sankaran

provider of technology and business consulting and staffing solutions, today announced that its Founder and CEO, Ann Ramakumaran, has been named to the Washington Business Journal’s 2026 Women Who Mean Business honorees.

Ann founded Ampcus in 2004 and has guided its growth into a global consulting and professional services organization. Her leadership combines a focus on client service and innovation with a commitment to mentorship, entrepreneurship and expanding opportunities for women in technology.

“Being recognized among the Washington Business

Journal’s Women Who Mean Business is a tremendous honor,” said Ann. “This recognition reflects the dedication of our Ampcus team, the trust of our clients and partners, and our shared belief that business success creates opportunities to make a meaningful difference. I am especially passionate about helping women and emerging entrepreneurs build the confidence, connections and capabilities to lead.”

Beyond her role at Ampcus, Ann has supported organizations dedicated to women’s business advancement and entrepreneurial development. Her leadership service has included board roles with many national Councils and regional organizations supporting women-owned businesses. She has also championed programs that encourage young women to explore science, technology and entrepreneurship.

Her previous honors include recognition as Women in Technology’s Entrepreneur of the Year and induction into the Women’s Business Enterprise Hall of Fame. These distinctions reflect a career spanning business leadership, technology innovation and advocacy for women entrepreneurs.

Salil Sankaran, President of Ampcus Group said "At Ampcus, we believe lasting growth starts with investing in people as we look ahead, our commitment remains clear: deliver meaningful value for our clients, create opportunities for our employees and help strengthen the communities we serve."
