

Slabfolio Now Covers All 391 Pokémon TCG Sets as Graded Card Sales Top $944 Million in 2026

Free graded card tracker adds a complete English and Japanese set index, per-set PSA 10 pricing and a Market Pulse section built on GemRate sales data.

CHICAGO, IL, UNITED STATES, October 21, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ --

Slabfolio, the free graded Pokémon card price tracker at slabfol.io, has completed a full index of every Pokémon Trading Card Game set released to date. The new Pokemon Sets in Order section lists all 391 sets, 181 English and 210 Japanese, organized by era with release dates, card counts and the top PSA 10 value for each set. The expansion arrives as the platform's new Market Pulse section reports $944.2 million in Pokémon card sales on eBay from January through August 2026, according to data sourced from GemRate.

Collectors should not need five tabs open to answer one question. Slabfolio puts set history, grade pricing and market direction on one screen, free.”

The set index runs from the original Wizards of the Coast base set through the current Mega Evolution era and already includes the 30th Celebration set that released on September 16, 2026, along with the upcoming Delta Reign set scheduled for November 6, 2026. Japanese sets receive the same treatment across 17 eras, from the original Japanese base set through MEGA. Each set links to its own page, and recent sets now link down to individual card pages that show the card scan, current values by grade and the set's chase cards.

Market Pulse is a new homepage section that replaces static charts with monthly sales data. It shows Pokémon sales volume on eBay for each month from September 2025 through August 2026, including $159.7 million in August 2026 alone, and ranks the biggest risers in the category.

The section also breaks sales down by Pokémon, showing that Charizard and Pikachu each account for roughly 13 percent of the total.

"Collectors should not need five tabs open to answer one question," said Kyle Eggleston, founder of Slabfolio. "Slabfolio puts set history, grade pricing and market direction on one screen, free. A collector can look up a slab, see what it sold for, check how the whole set is trending and decide what to buy, hold or sell in about a minute."

Slabfolio's core tools remain free. The price lookup tool pulls recent sold listings from eBay alongside PriceCharting data to show what a graded card is worth by grade. The portfolio tracker lets collectors upload their PSA, BGS, CGC and TAG slabs, track the combined value of a collection over time, and spot which cards are moving. The site also publishes a growing library of graded card guides for individual Pokémon, including Charizard, Pikachu and Snorlax, plus set chase guides such as the 30th Celebration chase card guide published ahead of that set's release.

The graded card market has grown into a serious category. GemRate's monthly figures place Pokémon among the largest trading card categories on eBay, and PSA population reports show grading volume for modern Pokémon sets continuing to climb. Slabfolio was built to give everyday collectors the same kind of data that dealers and large investors already use, without a subscription.

Slabfolio launched in spring 2026 and has since added support for both graded and ungraded collections, a trends page covering price movers and the rarest PSA 10 cards, and photo scanning that identifies multiple slabs from a single image. Additional set pages, card pages and collector tools are scheduled through the remainder of 2026.
